THIRD JUNIOR COUNCIL LECTURE
AT MUSEUM OCTOBER 14, 8:15 p.m.

The third of five lectures connected with The Cleveland Museum of Art's exhibition on Neo-classicism will be presented at the Museum Wednesday, October 14 at 8:15 p.m.. Rudolf Wittkower, Chairman of Columbia University's Department of Art History and Archaeology, will discuss the influence of the Renaissance on the development of the Classical tradition which began with ancient Greece and Rome and which will be explored up through the environment of modern times. The series is sponsored by the Museum's Junior Council.

Mr. Wittkower studied at the universities of Munich and Berlin. Before his Columbia appointment, he was Research Fellow at the Bibliotheca Hertziana, lecturer at Cologne University, reader in the History of Classical Tradition in Art at the University of London where he was also a professor in art history, staff member at the Warburg Institute, London, and visiting professor at Harvard University.

Mr. Wittkower is editor of the Columbia University Studies in Art and Archaeology and co-editor of Studies in Architecture. He has published, or helped to publish, eleven books and many articles on various subjects concerning art.
